

Maryland Niche Meats & Poultry Producers Directory

Welcome to the “Maryland Niche Meats and Poultry Producers Directory,” a publication developed jointly by niche meat and poultry producers and the Ag Marketing Program of University of Maryland Extension. This directory serves as a way to connect buyers, consumers, producers and market masters to fresh, high-quality farm-raised meats from Maryland producers. For ease of aggregating suppliers, this directory has been organized by product, though many producers offer multiple products. If a listing includes “USDA,” it applies only to Beef, Bison, Chevron, Lamb, and Pork.

This directory does not replace other listings or directories, but supplements them as a varietal sourcing list. The mention of, visual representation, or referred reference to a product, service, or organization in this publication does not imply endorsement by the author or any of the partners. Exclusion does not imply a negative evaluation. Descriptions are provided by the supplier, and not verified or monitored by the University of Maryland Extension.

Meat & Poultry Marketing Terms

American consumers can be confused about the differences between meat products with special marketing claims (i.e., organic, natural, naturally raised, and grass-fed) and regular or commodity meat products. The following report will discuss these production/marketing claims as defined by the USDA and address the differences between these products for food safety, human health, and eating quality.

The following are excerpts from the University of Florida IFAS Extension Publication #AN191, "Specialty Meat Marketing Claims: What's the Difference?" by Chadd Carr, Larry Eubanks, and Ryan Dijkhuis. It is reprinted here with the authors' permission. The full publication can be found at <http://edis.ifas.ufl.edu/an191>

History of Natural and Naturally Raised or Produced

Definitions

In 1982, the USDA Food Safety Inspection Service (FSIS) determined it should develop a definition of a "natural" meat or poultry product to guarantee the accuracy of product labels and advertising. FSIS defined a "natural" product as follows:

- "Any product which is not more than minimally processed and does not contain artificial flavor or coloring, chemical preservatives, or any other artificial ingredient."
- Minimal processing "does not alter the raw product, but only separates the food into component parts" (for example, grinding or chopping).

This definition only addresses the processes and ingredients used to make the meat or poultry product. Essentially many fresh meat products may be termed "natural" under this definition. The FSIS definition of "natural" processing is getting confused with the numerous products that claim to come from "naturally raised" or "naturally produced" livestock.

Defining "Naturally Raised or Produced"

The FSIS definition of "natural" says nothing about how an animal can or should be raised. On January 21, 2009, the Agricultural Marketing Service (AMS) division of the USDA released the "Standards for the Naturally Raised Claim for Livestock and the Meat and Meat Products Derived from Such Livestock." The entire USDA standard for Naturally Raised can be found at: <http://www.ams.usda.gov/AMSV1.0/getfile?dDocName=STELPRDC5075017>.

What the USDA "Naturally Raised" Standard States

The standard states that in order to sell animal products as "naturally raised," animals must be raised entirely without the following:

- Growth promotants
- Antibiotics
- Mammalian, avian, or aquatic by-products

These "naturally raised" animals can be administered the following:

- Parasite control products (de-wormer)
- Vaccinations
- Bloat prevention and treatment products (feed grade probiotics or buffers)
- Ionophores, though only according to the manufacturer's label recommendations for coccidiostat levels for parasite control

Grass-Fed

Defining Grass-Fed

The AMS division of USDA released the established standard to market meat from "grass-fed" livestock on October 16, 2007.

What the USDA Grass-Fed Standard States

The standard states that in order to sell products as “grass-fed,” post-weaning ruminant animals must be fed only:

- Forage from pasture
- OR
- Harvested forage

The standard also specifies that all animals whose products are marketed as “grass-fed” must have:

- Continuous access to pasture during the growing season

Additionally, if animals accidentally consumed grain or were supplemented grain during harsh weather conditions to maintain their well-being, the amount and frequency of grain supplementation must be documented explicitly.

Differences between Specialty and Raised by Traditional Methods

Food Safety and Human Health

The USDA requires honest labeling and advertising. Meat products defined under USDA as organically raised, “naturally raised,” or “grass-fed” animals are definitely raised differently than products from traditionally raised animals. Additionally, USDA Organic meat products are processed independent of non-organic products. Very little scientific research has been conducted comparing the safety, nutritional value, or eating quality of specialty products and commodity products. Even so, the research that has been conducted has no evidence that specialty meat products are safer or more nutritious than commodity meat products (Honikel 1998). Therefore, the USDA makes no claims stating that these specialty products are different.

Grass-Fed vs. Grain-Fed

Diet affects how much fat an animal will deposit. Since grass and hay are much less energy dense than grain:

- Grass-fed beef is normally leaner, both externally and within the muscle (marbling) and has less saturated fat and cholesterol (Hedrick et al. 1983).
- However, if animals are fed the same feedstuffs (i.e., Organic corn vs. commodity corn), those products will not be different relative to fat content.

Eating Quality

If animals are fed the same feedstuffs, there will be very little, if any difference in eating quality of meat products of animals raised conventionally, organically, or naturally. However, since grass-fed animals are leaner than grain-fed animals this affects eating quality. Generally, cooked products from grass-fed animals as compared to grain-fed animals will:

- Taste distinctly different or have a higher incidence of “off-flavors” – because of the association of fat with desirable flavor.
- Tend to be tougher - because marbling contributes to tenderness and grass-fed animals grow slower and are generally older than grain-fed animals.
- Tend to be less juicy - because when marbling melts during cooking it contributes to juiciness.
- All of these findings are well established and cited by numerous authors (Regan et al. 1977; Hedrick et al. 1983; Crouse et al. 1984).

Conventionally Raised vs. Organically or Naturally Raised

Anything an animal is fed or administered can exist in its body tissues. However, the Food and Drug Administration requires all animals to be withdrawn from antibiotics for a specified period prior to harvest. Even so:

- Commodity products can have slightly higher residual antibiotic levels than organic or naturally raised products; however, research shows this minimal increase will not lead to human antibiotic resistance.

The USDA allows ruminant animals (cattle, sheep, and goats) to be implanted with hormonal growth promotants. Therefore:

- Commodity products can have higher residual estrogen levels than organic or naturally raised products; however, all research shows this minimal increase has no effect on human health (Kuipper-Goodman 1998; Kouba 2003).

Conclusions

Unquestionably, the U.S. meat industry provides consumers the safest products in the world, regardless of production method, and consumers should feel overwhelmingly confident as they make their purchasing selections.
